

ploughing through

i have laid down my plough that cuts furrows through my history my family my soul upending, turning, rending all that is in my path

i am now lying not in the carnage
but in the fallow field watching the wildflowers in the distance that sway in the aphrodisiac breezes hoping next seasons blooms are ample